

Theatre is a Rhythm Walking Child

An Exclusive Poem by Joseph Coelho

Commissioned for the Big Imaginations Festival 2017

Theatre is a rhythm walking child stomping in a flared suit
of velvet-curtain red,
lighting up the stage
with hands full of surprise her mouth giggling fairytales.

She is a griot, a Birbal a trapezing travelling storyteller of big imagination.
Mashing myths with memories and histories catapulting you on musical journeys.

She is here,
in this space between seat and stage.
Your touchstone to story,
your turnpike to imagination.

Go with her
she will somersault you along the edge of the waterside where your dreams dream of you.

Go with her,
she has frights that will delight, she has the Boo! That is spot on.

Go with her.
She is theatre,
she jangles the keys to the citadel,
to happily ever afters,
to the wild rumpus
to a joy, a party, a festival a lesson. A mirror.

Go with her.
She is a body of light
that fades shadow.
That melody, that clarinet, double-bass that lets you drift in worlds of deep breaths and magic.

Go with her, with him, with them the players, the singers, the dancers that place words into the mouth of your soul through music, through drama, through poetry.

Go with them
because they are you.
Go with them
because you are theatre.
Lean in
because you are welcome.

Win a signed Joseph Coelho AKA Poetry Joe Poem and two Poetry Joe books!

Tell us your favourite children's story and why – you can use words or drawings to tell us, or you can even write a poem to tell us what it is! But entries must be kept to 50 words and submitted by the 18 October!

Email bigimagination@z-arts.org with your entries. Good luck!